Types of Unemployment

Frictional: there are enough jobs, but due to job search time, some people experience short-term unemployment while they find a job.

Structural: there are enough jobs, but the new jobs being created require new skills, which those out of work do not have.

Cyclical: During a recession, the rate of job creation slows, and some jobs are eliminated, resulting in a shortage of jobs.